

I do not want Indiana's Telephone Privacy laws lessened. Since the recent ones have gone into effect, we have much more peace and much less stress in our home. I estimate that we used to receive 3, 4, or even 5 calls a day, that were very aggressive, repetitive, and unsolicited. Many were driven by automated calling services. For those that had real people behind them, the people were frequently very annoying, not giving us talk time, and making us feel almost guilty if we hung up on them. I would hate to see this law weakened. In fact, I think it should be a National Law, with even more teeth in it, to include penalties.
